It's quite a challenge to create a design for a legendary building filled with iconic classics. Let alone the SAS Royal Hotel by one of Denmark's own icons – Arne Jacobsen. Founders of Space Copenhagen Peter Bundgaard Rützou and Signe Bindslev Henriksen welcomed the opportunity with a solution that could fit with the past and look fresh long into the future. Loafer.

“Whenever you design for a hotel interior, there are many factors to consider,” explains Rützou. “With the SAS Royal Hotel, the lobby is fundamental as a focal point. The piece we were asked to create had to work with their spiral staircase and the circular columns elsewhere in the space.” “By definition, a lobby is so open,” adds Henriksen. It's easy to feel a bit exposed. With Loafer, the shape links with the circular design lingo. It's intimate yet open. Even in public spaces, it somehow makes you feel safe and protected.”

Rounded in the back with a flat surface facing front, Loafer boasts a look that's soft yet sharp. As the name implies, Loafer is all about relaxing. You can feel comfortable alone in your own world and equally at ease conversing with others, with several Loafers clustered together. Choose velvet for an elegant expression, canvas for a more casual look or any number of textiles and patterns to either blend into a décor or stand out.
